

to benefit even further from competition in the multichannel video programming distribution marketplace if cable providers are afforded some of the same opportunities we have made available to satellite. We have to be careful not to tip the balance in favor of one industry over another. This is why the bill includes a provision requiring the FCC to study and report back to Congress in nine months on the impact of retransmission consent and certain blackout rules on competition in the multichannel video programming distribution market and, in particular, on the ability of rural cable television systems to provide their customers with digital broadcast television programming.

Millions of people in rural areas subscribe to cable television service, often from small cable operators. Once again, it is not our intent to create a competitive advantage for one technology over another consumers should not be forced to choose between DBS and cable in order to receive digital broadcast television signals. I look forward to receiving the commission's report and I am confident the committee will give serious consideration to any recommendations for additional legislative action contained therein.

This Congress sent a powerful message today that we understand the importance of the digital transition, and the powerful benefits for public safety, television viewers, innovation, public safety and our economy. I fully expect the momentum of this victory will carry forward into the next Congress where we can build on these great accomplishments for consumers.

CONGRATULATING SENATOR STEVENS

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I congratulate the Senate Appropriations chairman, our President pro tempore, TED STEVENS. Since 1971, for 34 years, Senator STEVENS has served on the Appropriations Committee, and for the last 8 years, or almost 8 years, he served as chairman of that committee, with a 1-year interruption in 2002 to be its ranking member.

Beginning with the new Congress in January, the chairmanship of the committee will pass to another Senator. So today the chairman has brought to the floor the last appropriations bill under his chairmanship, the Consolidated Appropriations Act of 2005.

It is only appropriate that this final bill was put together—and we all saw it play out over the last several hours, days, and weeks—with the same hard work, the same focus, the same tenacity, and the same perseverance which has characterized his leadership of this committee over the last many years.

I do, on behalf of the Senate Republican caucus—indeed, the entire Senate—say, thank you, Mr. Chairman, for all you have done.

It would be a mistake, also, if as leader I did not recognize the extremely hard work of the chairman's staff under the superb leadership and guidance of the staff director, Jim Morhard. At the end of this Congress, Mr. Morhard will be leaving public service after over 26 years, most of it spent right here in the Senate.

Jim, we thank you for your dedication and your service to Government, to this institution, and to the Appropriations Committee.

There have been a lot of long days and long nights over the last several weeks for staff, and some staff, particularly those on the Energy and Water Appropriations Subcommittee, have literally gone for over 48 hours straight without sleep to bring us to this point today and tonight where we have passed this legislation. I know I speak for all Senators on both sides of the aisle when I say thank you for your work done under some very challenging and very difficult circumstances.

This has also been a challenging year for the budget and appropriations process. We were able, though, in spite of all those challenges, to establish an enforceable $821.9 billion spending limit for this year. The bill today, along with the other four appropriations bills enacted to date, have lived by that strict spending limit we established.

Total appropriations, excluding defense and natural disaster emergency spending, will increase 3.9 percent over last year with the enactment of the bill that we passed tonight.

More important, appropriations for nondefense, nonhomeland security spending will increase by less than 1.7 percent, and that is the smallest growth in nondefense spending in this area of the Federal budget in nearly a decade.

So, yes, this has been a very tough bill setting priorities and making difficult tradeoffs to stay within the spending limit, while at the same time addressing the priority items, all of which is not easy, to say the least, but within the strict confines of this bill, it does provide $19.5 billion for veterans medical care, $16.2 billion for NASA, $28.6 billion for the National Institutes of Health, and $57 billion for the Department of Education, among other important, significant domestic programs.

The bill also provides nearly $3 billion in necessary funding to address the pandemic of HIV/AIDS, and that is $700 million more than last year. It also provides $400 million, actually over $400 million in humanitarian and refugee assistance for Sudan and $1.5 billion for the Millennium Challenge Account.

Despite the tightness of this budget, Chairman STEVENS and Senator BYRD have brought a great bill before us today, and a great bill has been passed tonight. Yes, we know it does not please everyone; there is no way it possibly could. But it is the final product of this Congress that has been agreed to and a product of which we can be quite proud.

I do appreciate the Senators' support for this bill, and it does bring to completion the fiscal year 2005 appropriations process. Thank you, Chairman STEVENS.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I was reluctant to cast my vote against this bill which has a lot of good things in it, and it is not as bad as some bills that have come through, but I want to share some of my concerns and thoughts tonight.

We have had charges for sometime that we have used accounting gimmicks to get around the budget caps or limits in the bill. This bill's gimmicks are not as bad as we have had in some years, but there are some here, and I think we ought to talk about them.

Our budget for the year was $821.919 billion for the discretionary account. In order to comply with the budget resolution, this omnibus bill relies on roughly $1.6 billion in practices that many of us have described as gimmicks. And there is an additional $400 million in spending that was designated as an emergency which is not subject to the budget limitations. So it is basically $2 billion over what the budget limit should be, unpaid for and funded by freezing the debt in reality.
